Re: File Number S7-43-10 – End-User Exception to Mandatory Clearing of Security-Based Swaps

Dear Ms. Murphy:

On behalf of Americans for Financial Reform, thank you for the opportunity to comment on the proposed rule, “End-User Exception to Mandatory Clearing of Security-Based Swaps.” Americans for Financial Reform is an unprecedented coalition of over 250 national, state and local groups who have come together to reform the financial industry. Members of our coalition include consumer, civil rights, investor, retiree, community, labor, religious and business groups as well as economists.

Reckless swaps and derivatives trading played a critical role in the financial crisis, turning the fallout from the crash of the domestic housing market into a global economic catastrophe. The Dodd-Frank Wall Street Reform and Consumer Protection Act put in place key statutory changes intended to prevent the recurrence of a systemic crisis like the one experienced in 2008. It is now up to the regulators to ensure the success of Dodd-Frank by putting rules in place that are comprehensive and do not create loopholes that will be exploited in the future. The proposed rule will be critical in providing the Commission a comprehensive view of the security-based swap market and giving regulators access to data critical to the safety and soundness of the market.

Proposed Rule 3Cg-1(a)(5), Meeting Financial Obligations

Proposed Rule 3Cg-1(a)(5) requires end-users, when relying on the clearing exception to engage in an over-the-counter swap transaction, “to provide certain information to the Commission regarding the methods used to mitigate credit risk.” The proposed rule defines several types of credit risk mitigation tools and requires end-users to disclose to the Commission whether any or all of these tools are used in the security-based swap transaction in question. We agree that this information should be disclosed. AFR believes, however, that in order to ensure the financial integrity of the security-based swaps market, the Commission should collect substantially more information.

AFR urges the SEC to require additional disclosures designed to provide a clear picture of financial risks associated with transactions believed to be eligible for the exception. The required “Financial Obligation Notice” should be strengthened to require information about:

- the types of collateral provided by the end-user and the impact of posting collateral on the end-user's ability to meet its financial obligations;
- whether the collateral requirements are unilateral or bilateral;
- contractual terms and whether they are triggered by changes in the credit-rating or other financial circumstances of either of the counterparties;
- whether any "third-party" guarantor of the end-user's obligations is a parent or affiliate of the person invoking the end-user exception; and
- the identity of any collateral agent, custodian or other entity involved in segregating collateral.

In Footnote 28 of the proposed rule, the Commission states that in some swaps transactions, counterparties "choose not to mitigate credit risk and instead rely on the general creditworthiness of their opposite counterparty, given the circumstances and financial terms of the transaction."¹ The Commission goes on to reference guidance issued by the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency that states "[c]redit exposure arising from derivative activities should be addressed within the same framework used to assess credit risk in traditional banking activities."² In other words, when an end-user enters an uncollateralized swap with a bank, the bank is still taking on credit risk and that risk is substantially similar to an uncollateralized loan or a credit facility. An uncollateralized swap transaction, therefore, is really two transactions – a hedging transaction and a loan. The bank charges the end-user for this implied loan by embedding a fee in the swap transaction.

If Dodd-Frank is to be implemented in a way that truly brings transparency to the derivatives markets, these two transactions must be separately reported to the SEC. Americans for Financial Reform urges the SEC to include in the Financial Obligation Notice a disclosure that breaks out the amount paid by the end-user for the swap and, separately, the fee paid for the implied loan. This will help the Commission to more effectively evaluate the derivatives market. More importantly, however, it will provide end-users with the information they need to shop for the best price and make informed decisions about whether choosing to use the regulated, cleared swaps market is more cost effective.

Required Consideration of a Clearing Exemption for Small Banks, Savings Associations, Farm Credit System Institutions and Credit Unions

The Dodd-Frank Act directs the Commission to consider whether to exempt from mandatory clearing banks, savings associations, farm credit system institutions and credit unions with less than $10 billion in assets. Proposed Rules 3Cg-a(b) and (c) would exempt such institutions from mandatory clearing. The Commission's stated reason for proposing the exemption is that smaller financial institutions "may face difficulties in meeting the burdens associated with a mandatory clearing requirement due to their limited operations or infrequent use of security-based swaps."

² Comptroller of the Currency, Comptroller's Handbook: Risk Management of Financial Derivatives, 43 (1997) available at <http://www.occ.gov/static/publications/handbook/deriv.pdf>.

Americans for Financial Reform urges the Commission to ensure that any financial institution that engages in more than de minimis activity in the swaps market is required to clear, including small banks, savings associations, farm credit system institutions and credit unions. If these institutions' security-based swap activity is truly de minimis, they should still be required to file Financial Obligation Notices in order to ensure that regulators have a comprehensive view of activity in the security-based swap market and a clear picture of the counterparty relationships.

Congress has imposed on the SEC the heavy responsibility of adopting regulations that bring meaningful reform to the over-the-counter derivatives markets and help to prevent a repetition of the devastating financial crisis of 2008. The proposed rule falls short of what is needed to meet that responsibility. Accordingly, we urge the Commission to require entities exempt from clearing security-based swaps to disclose substantially more information than would be required by the proposed rule and to ensure that any financial entity that engages in more than a de minimis amount of security-based swap transactions is required to clear.

Thank you again for this opportunity to share our views on the proposed rule. If you have the further questions, please contact Heather Slavkin, AFL-CIO at (202) 637-5318.

Sincerely,

Americans for Financial Reform
